The fact that there has been no serious reaction against General Mangin's Army between the Aisne and the Oise, combined, with the vast number of prisoners whom the Allies have taken, points to a genuine demoralisation in certain sections of the German Army, and proves the efficiency of Marshal Foch's plan to reduce the enemy's moral resistance. Nevertheless, it would be foolish to imagine that the time is yet ripe for the delivery of the final blow. We must look forward to another winter's severe fighting, and hope that by a united effort we shall secure victory in 1919. It is certain that during the couning months the enemy will make a supreme attempt to break the unity of the Allies. In that lies their only hope of salvation. If they could secure the independent working of the armies opposing them, and remove the danger which is contained in the single mind working for a common victory, they might be saved. That must be guarded against at all costs. Meanwhile we can, with justification, adopt the phrase which Hindenburg has used for the purpose of buoying up the drooping spirits of the German people, and say: "Success is with us."

The capture of Bapaume and an advance to Péronne would make of the old Somme battlefield a great salient which the enemy would be obliged to evacuate. That is what is happening between Chaulnes and the Ailette, where Roye and Noyon are almost within that front—that is, immediately below Arras—we have captured Hénin and the hill to the east of it. Still further north there have been significant local actions in which we were successful. Germany's Peace Plans.

For three years Spain endured German outrages with a meekness very unworthy of the once proudest matton in Europe. Now she makes a firm protest against the destruction of the reshipping, and threatens to ecize a German ship in Spanish waters for every Spanish ship that is sunk by a German submarine. This form of outrage has not suddenly become more wicked, but the German influences at Madrid, and the Spanish democracy, always friendly to the Allies, has hastened to assert itself. It is significant that Spanish securities were strong in the London market last Saturday, and not less significant is the present "slump" in the value of the mark in all heutral countries and the rapidly rising value of the British sovereign. Such incidents reveal Europe's true appreciation of the German retirements "according to plan." There are many signs, too, that Germany's own statesmen have begun to contemplate the prospect of defeat in the field, and that their chief hope now is to be able to rob subject of the expenses of the subject of the expenses which have been then on the said of the Press to suggest that we were not bearing of the land war.
